Crosses of Military Service given

Three Crosses of Military Service were awarded and a talk on "Lee — A Leader of Youth" was given at the annual Lee-Jackson-Maury luncheon of the Old Dominion Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy Saturday in the Stewart Arms Hotel.

The Rev. George Wesley Jones, slated speaker, was unable to be present because of duties at Court Street United Methodist Church of which he is pastor. Katharine Gilbert, chapter historian, introduced Mrs. Jones, who gave her husband's paper.

"In a time when we are reminded constantly of 'the generation gap,' a time when college presidents are frequently resigning their positions, and a time when higher education is confronted with great challenges, let me turn your attention to what I consider some of the greatest years in the life of General Lee, the years of his presidency of Washington College, from his inauguration of Oct. 2, 1865, to the day of his death, Oct. 12, 1870. . ."

A student himself Lee quickly learned the names of the students, "delicately inquired into their financial condition, their home affairs, and made memoranda of their war records, if they had served in the Army."

"When young students would ask for a copy of the rules, he would say, 'Young sirs, we have no printed rules. We have but one rule here, and it is that every student must be a gentleman.' As a president, Lee relied on the principles of truth, honor and courtesy to maintain order. . ."

Jones wrote, "The president had no patience with meanness or persistent falsehood; and with perpetually defiant youths he took swift action, terminating their connection with the school immediately. But on the other hand, he had infinite patience with most forms of youthful indiscretion, and often when the faculty recommended that a student be 'sent home,' if he recognized the fundamental character as sound, he would say, 'Gentlemen, don't you think it would be better to bear with him a little longer? Perhaps we may do him some good.'"

Neither Lee's administration nor his form of discipline remotely resembled the military. On the contrary, the distinguished graduate from the United States Military Academy at West Point, felt that military discipline was unnecessary for training for civil life. He said he had observed the failure in business pursuits of men who had resigned from the Army.

The president's chief concern was not for the student who excelled, "Always observe the stage driver's rule," he said to a new professor. "Take care of the poor horses."

Lee's knowledge of human nature, his sympathetic tolerance of the foibles of both youth and adult, and above all his sense of humor gave him the key to almost perfect relationships with students and faculty alike.

In closing a story was recounted which "best sums up Lee's character. A sophomore was called to his office because of inattention to his work. "If you do not improve, you will fail your work," Lee pointed out.

"But General, you were a failure," the young man said brashly.

"Yes, but let us hope you will be more fortunate than I," Lee replied quietly.

Ruth Burgess, president,

Recipients were: Andrew Watts Williams of Chesterfield, the Cross of Military Service for Overseas duty during World War II; his son, Andrew Watts Williams Jr., the Vietnam Service Cross and Emory Lawrence Musselwhite III of Lynchburg, the Vietnam Service Cross.

Mrs. John H. Davis, first vice president, offered the invocation and Katharine Gilbert, chapter historian, introduced the speaker.

Franklin Woolard was soloist and Mrs. Mildred H. Dennis, accompanist. Woolard is choir director at Beulah Baptist Church and Mrs. Dennis is organist at that church.

Old Dominion Speaker Gives Talk On Sherman

Owen H. Goolsby was guest speaker for the meeting of the Old Dominion Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy Thursday at Country Gardens. Goolsby spoke on "Sherman's March to the Sea." Members discussed forthcoming Memorial Day plans for ceremonies to be held in the Old Methodist Cemetery on May 30. The Rev. Jerold D. Shetter, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, will be speaker. The services each year are sponsored by the two UDC Chapters, the Old Dominion and the Kirkwood Otey, and the Southern Memorial Association.

Mrs. Frank R. Harringer, chairman of the A. P. Hill circle, was hostess assisted by members of the circle. Because of the illness of the president, Ruth Burgess, and the vice-president, Mrs. John H. Davis, Katharine Gilbert, chapter historian, conducted the meeting.

Six lap afghans, designed for use by amputees at McGuire Veterans Hospital in Richmond, were turned in by the Patriotic Services committee.

Mrs. H. L. Goolsby, former president of the Kirkwood Otey Chapter and mother of the speaker, was welcomed as a guest.

The speaker told of Sherman's early life. Born Feb. 8, 1820 in Lancaster, Ohio, William Tecumseh Sherman was a descendant of Edmond Sherman, who emigrated from England to the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1634. His father, Charles R. Sherman, was a judge of the Supreme Court of Ohio. After the death of his father Sherman was adopted by Thomas Ewing, well known politician and a former member of the national cabinet. After graduating from the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. Sherman was commissioned a second lieutenant and served in Florida and later for four years at Fort Moultrie, S. C., Goolsby said.

The speaker told of Sherman's famous March through Georgia and the tactics he used to devastate the land and impoverish the people.

Goolsby said, "B. H. Liddell Hart, the well known military scientist, in his foreword to Sherman's own 'Memoirs' states: 'the American Civil War was the first between modern democracies, and he (Sherman) clearly perceived that the resisting power of such a democracy depends even more on the strength of the people's will than on the strength of its armies. His unchecked march through the heart of the South was the most effective way to create and spread a sense of helplessness that would undermine the will to continue the war.'"

UDC told of brave youths during battle in Civil War

The contributions youth of the South made during the Civil War was emphasized in a talk on "Young Heroes and Heroines of the Confederacy" at the meeting Wednesday of the Old Dominion Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Mrs. Carroll J. Burgess of near Elon was hostess with members of the John G. McCausland Circle of which Mrs. Evie F. Ewers is chairman.

Katharine Gilbert, chapter historian, introduced Mrs. Fred C. McDowell, speaker and a member, who declared, "Youth served in many capacities in the War Between the States. Their reasons for serving were many but where youth were involved, generally there was determination."

Mrs. McDowell told of the bravery and service of students at the University of Virginia, Virginia Military Institute and other schools. She told of the extreme youth of many who served. "The Drummer Boy of Shiloh," John Clem, was only 10 years old when he served. Later he was with the army at Chattanooga and was called "The Drummer Boy of Chickamauga," she said.

"Girls as well as boys served as scouts and spies for varying lengths of time. Belle Boyd was one...being only 17 when the war began. Her spy efforts for Stonewall Jackson allowed him to rush Front Royal and save bridges which were planned for burning by the Federals..."

She noted that Sam Davis, who was called the Nathan Hale of the South, commented once that he would rather die a thousand deaths than betray a friend or a noble cause. "I cannot turn my back on duty. I have only one life and I give it for honor. Do your duty men, I'm ready." He was hanged Nov. 27, 1863, because he would not give the name or any information about his superior officer. Today his home in the foothills of Tennessee is a memorial shrine.

In closing she read a poem by Frances O. Ticknor titled "Little Giffin of Tennessee."

Miss Ruth Burgess, president, conducted a short business session at which it was announced that the District III UDC spring conference will be held in Chatham April 28.

The Jefferson Davis birthday breakfast will be held on June 2 at the Town and Country Restaurant. Fred M. Davis will be guest speaker.
