ELEANOR MAE WALTERS TREECE (1921-2003)

Eleanor Mae Walters, daughter of Clarence Samuel Walters and Helen LaDonna Marmet, was born 11 February 1921 in Mansfield, Ohio. She was graduated from the Mansfield General Hospital School of Nursing in 1947. She received a bachelor's degree in biology from Ashland College in Ashland, Ohio, and a master's degree in education and nursing from the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minnesota. In 1967, she earned a doctor of philosophy degree in higher education.

On 11 April 1954, in Casper, Wyoming, Eleanor Walters married James William Treece, Jr., son of James William Treece and Myrtle Chaney. Together they completed their education at the University of Minnesota. In the 1980's, they moved to Lynchburg, Virginia, where they both taught at Liberty University. Eleanor was instrumental in starting a nursing program at Liberty University. A member of District 3 Virginia Nursing Association, she received the prestigious Akers Award in 1990 presented to an outstanding nurse in the district. During their lives, the Treeces were also very active on the mission fields, serving in more than 22 countries while representing numerous mission boards.

An educator and researcher, Dr. Treece was author of Vocational Choice and Satisfactions of Licensed Practical Nurses (1969); Internship in Nursing Education: Technoterm (1974); and Elements of Research in Nursing (1982) which she co-authored with her husband, and which was reprinted in Philippine and Japanese editions. Her last book, Transpetalation: Beyond Quantitative and Qualitative Research Applied to Multiple Sclerosis (1999), presented a conceptual model and new insight into the cause of multiple sclerosis.

Dr. Eleanor Mae Walters Treece died 10 November 2003 in Lynchburg, Virginia.
