the present year. I think in view of the objects of the Society, the high character of its Hon President and his Co. Officers and the great wealth of its Constituency. The London Office should contribute from its abundance as much as we expect from our poverty, as an earnest of the good will of our people to the Movement, the best results of which inures to them. If this can be done it will give the Society a Capital of Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The interest on this, the Annual Memberships and Fees, collected by the Society will give an ample revenue to sustain it in its work.

I would earnestly advise that the operations of the Society be confined to the Mississippi Valley otherwise it will have no vitality and will fall still-born, because of the neutralizing effect of diverse interests.

With assurance of my hearty sympathy with the objects of the Society and my earnest endeavours to promote them
